

Abstract

This project report describes the creation of an empowering children's book titled “Powerful Together. The story of Carlotta & Esra”. The book content is influenced by the theoretical approaches of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, Paulo Freire's Anti-Oppressive Pedagogy, and feminist post-structural theories. Through the portrayal of diverse characters, the book attempts to reflect a more authentic view of society and to reduce prejudices. In addition, readers learn about the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child in a child-friendly way. In the story, children are confronted with injustices, which they defend themselves against with support. Accordingly, this book has an empowering character. Furthermore, there are interactive pages so that readers can actively participate in the creation of the book. After the children's book was completed, it was presented in a social work project where the author was employed.
