

A critical perspective on Volunteerism

by: Rhoneil Gonzaga Gabriel and Lisa Maria Haring

Method

In qualitative research, there are a wide variety of methods for data gathering, from observation, textual or visual analysis to interviews. In this project, we used semi structured interviews to collect data and used video to document the entire procedure. This approach of interviewing is flexible as it consist of several key question that helps defining the areas we wanted to explore. In this way, richer and more detailed data has been collected. Besides that, it also allowed us to explore new topics/areas that we did not considered relevant before, but placed in context, gave sense to the result of the study. Both of us defined the interview guide, a document in which it was written all the areas we wanted to explore and considered relevant for the purpose of the study.