Abstract

India will thrive the day people start spending money on their daughter's education rather than her wedding.” – Anonymous

The above line holds true till date, of course there has been a tremendous improvement but still India is far far behind in terms of women empowerment.

My paper talks about Women's Rights in India, important acts to protect these rights and awareness about these rights. Through this research paper, I would like to find out the awareness level of Indian women about their own rights. I would also like to get an in-depth knowledge about the structure of using these rights. I also aim to understand the level of awareness amongst Indian women on this structure to practice these rights. My paper will be a combination of the theory on the rights and a statistical representation of the survey. My survey will be based on a questionnaire and on focused group basis. The outcome will be shared through a graphical as well as in a narration presentation. The outcome of the research will be analyzed to understand the level of awareness.
