

Respect Diversity -
Human Rights Education in the LGBT Community in Ghana.

An Analysis of Experiences using Peer Education to promote Human Rights & Sexual and Reproductive Health Rights

An Abstract of the Thesis By Josefine Yeboah

The thesis at hand is a research paper that investigates the experiences of peer educators who are implementing Human rights education in the LGBT community in Ghana to promote Human Rights and Sexual and Reproductive Health Rights.

The author aims to find out what requirements peer educators need in order to implement their work and therefore uses a qualitative research approach. The thesis propounds findings of the collected data and presents recommendations for action that could be used by the respective NGO to improve their organizational structures including the actual field work.

The research paper is a brief study on the mentioned topic that can be used as a suggestion on further research in the field.