

Racism, Prejudice, Discrimination that the Second Generation of Indian and Pakistani Diaspora faces in the Job Market in Germany

An Abstract of the Thesis By

Parul Rohal

This thesis presents in what way the second generation of the Indian and Pakistani Diaspora face racism, prejudice and discrimination in the job market in Germany. To find the answer for this objective qualitative research methodology were used for the data collection, where four second generation of Indian Diaspora and three second generation of Pakistani Diaspora participated in the personal interview. Through this empirical research, it could able to present the existence of racial discrimination, and other forms of discrimination due to gender, age, religion, skin color, and ethnic background. This research opens the space for future research to understand the identity and belonging issue faced by the second generation of Indian and Pakistani Diaspora in society due to the experiences of exclusion and othering.